

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
EASTERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

SOUTH TAHOE PUBLIC UTILITY
DISTRICT, a public utility entity,

NO. 2:02-cv-0238-MCE-JFM

Plaintiff,

v.

ORDER

1442.92 ACRES OR LAND IN ALPINE COUNTY, CALIFORNIA;
F. HEISE LAND & LIVESTOCK
COMPANY, INC., a Nevada corporation, WILLIAM WEAVER; EDDIE R. SNYDER; CROCKETT ENTERPRISES, INC., a Nevada corporation,

Defendants.

-----oo0oo-----

Through the present motion, Defendant Integrated Farms, LLC ("Integrated Farms") seeks an award of litigation expenses against Plaintiff South Tahoe Public Utility District ("the District") pursuant to the provisions of California Code of Civil Procedure § 1250.410. Integrated Farms has also filed its Bill of Costs following the jury's verdict in its favor.

1 As set forth below, Integrated Farms' Motion for Litigation 2 Expense is denied and its request for costs will be taxed, in 3 part.

4 On April 27, 2006, the jury rendered a verdict in this 5 eminent domain action for Integrated Farms in the amount of 6 $12,659.439.00. That verdict represented the just compensation 7 due Integrated Farms for the District's acquisition of its so-8 called Heise Ranch. The only issue before the jury was the 9 amount of just compensation. In now arguing its entitlement to 10 an addition $2,288,853.00 in attorney's fees and litigation 11 expenses, Integrated Farms points to the disparity between the 12 District's offer and the ultimate jury award as evincing 13 unreasonableness on the District's part and due care with respect 14 to its own pre-trial position in resolving the case, which was 15 far closer to the jury verdict than the District's final offer.<sup>1</sup> 16 Both sides agree that Integrated's entitlement to litigation 17 expenses, if any, is governed by California law and controlled by 18 application of California Code of Civil Procedure § 1250.410.

19 Section 1250.410(a) requires the Plaintiff, at least twenty 20 days before trial on issues relating to just compensation, to 21 file and serve its final compensation offer. Similarly, within 22 the same time frame, the defendant must likewise indicate its 23 final demand.

24 ///

---

26 <sup>1</sup>Even Plaintiff does not dispute the reasonableness of 27 Integrated Farms' demand given its relatively close proximity to 28 the jury's award. See Pl.'s Opp. 3:11-12. Consequently, as set forth below, the reasonableness of the District's final offer becomes the crux of this Motion.

1 In subdivision (b), the statute goes on to provide that 2 litigation expenses may be awarded to the defendant if the Court 3 finds the plaintiff's offer to be unreasonable:

4 (b) If the court, on motion of the defendant made within 30 5 days after entry of judgment, finds that the offer of the 6 plaintiff was unreasonable and that the demand of the 7 defendant was reasonable viewed in the light of the evidence 8 admitted and the compensation awarded in the proceeding, the 9 costs allowed pursuant to Section 1268.710 shall include the 10 defendant's litigation expenses.

11 The statute admonishes that "[t]hese offers and demands 12 shall be the only offers and demand considered by the court in 13 determining the entitlement, if any, to litigation expenses." 14 Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410(a). Other written offers and 15 demands filed and served before or during the trial may be 16 considered only with respect to assessing the amount of 17 litigation expenses after a defendant's entitlement to same has 18 been established. Id. at § 1250.410(c).

19 On September 22, 2004, twenty days before this trial was 20 initially scheduled to commence on October 12, 2004,<sup>2</sup> the 21 District filed its Section 1250.410 offer to settle for $7.0 22 million. Integrated Farms, in turn, filed its final demand to 23 resolve the issue of just compensation for $12.1 million.
24 Integrated Farms now claims it is entitled to its litigation 25 expenses because the jury's ultimate award, at almost $12.66 26 million, exceeded its demand by more than $500,000.00, and 27 exceeded the District's statutory offer by some $5.66 million, or 28 55 percent.

29 ///

<sup>2</sup>The case was thereafter continued three times before trial actually commenced in April of 2006.

1 In L.A. County Metro. Transp. Auth. v. Continental Dev.
2 Corp., 16 Cal. 4th 694 (1994) ("MTA"), the California Supreme 3 Court considered Continental's motion for litigation expenses 4 after the jury's award of severance damages substantially 5 exceeded the MTA's final statutory offer.<sup>3</sup> In establishing a 6 framework for determining whether MTA's offer was nonetheless 7 reasonable, the MTA court identified the following criteria:

8 "Several factors have emerged as general guidelines for 9 determining the reasonableness or unreasonableness of 10 offers. They are "(1) the amount of the difference between 11 the offer and the compensation awarded, (2) the percentage 12 of the difference between the offer and award... and (3) the 13 good faith, care and accuracy in how the amount of offer and 14 the amount of demand, respectively, were determined."
15 (citation omitted)."

16 Id. at 720.

17 Despite the fact that two of the three factors it identified 18 pertained specifically to the numeric discrepancy between the 19 offer and award, the MTA court nonetheless cautioned that "the 20 mathematical relation between the condemner's highest offer and 21 the award is only one factor that should enter into the trial 22 court's determination" as to reasonableness. Id., emphasis 23 added.

28 <sup>3</sup>At $1,015,793.00, the jury's award was more than $800,000.00 in excess of MTA's final statutory offer of $200,000.00. That offer was less than eighteen percent of the ultimate damages award, and more than double what Continental had offered to take to resolve the litigation (its final statutory demand was $500,000.00).

Moreover, the court cited approvingly to its prior decision in Redevelopment Agency v. Gilmore, 38 Cal. 3d 790, 808 (1985) as standing for the proposition that the "evidence adduced at trial" must be evaluated by the court in determining the reasonableness of the plaintiff's offer in addition to the simple amount of the ultimate award. Id.

Factually, MTA involved complicated damage assessments hinging on building redesign, noise mitigation, and visual impact in the wake of MTA's condemnation proceedings. Id. at 701. The trial court noted that it was primarily the noise and visual impact issues that separated the parties' valuation positions, and found that the difference between the final offer and demand of the parties was attributable to "the different manner in which their respective experts valued [those issues]." Id. at 721. The trial court went on to explain that it would be unfair to determine that the plaintiff acted unreasonably by relying on its own expert:

"[E]ach [expert] made highly technical presentations which the court found equally plausible in so far as it was able to understand the opinions. The court believes it would be unfair to determine that the plaintiff acted unreasonably by relying on its own noise expert in light of the exceedingly technical nature of the evidence presented."

Id.

While the California Court of Appeal reversed the trial court's denial of Continental's motion for litigation expenses, the California Supreme Court disagreed, stating that "MTA cannot be said to have made its offer unreasonably or in bad faith." Id. at 722.

1 The California Supreme Court therefore did not find that the 2 trial court had abused its discretion in denying the motion.

3 In Escondido Union School Dist. v. Casa Suenos de Oro, Inc., 4 129 Cal. App. 4th 944, (2005), a post-MTA case, the California 5 Fourth District Court of Appeal was faced with a final statutory 6 offer by the plaintiff of $180,000.00 in juxtaposition with a 7 $370,000.00 total demand from defendant and a jury award of 8 $495,850.00. In denying defendant's motion for litigation 9 expenses, the trial court, relying on the MTA criteria set forth 10 above, found that the plaintiff had nonetheless exercised good 11 faith, care and accuracy in determining the amount of its offer.
12 The trial court noted that the central issue presented by the 13 case - whether or not manufactured homes were "improvements 14 pertaining to realty"- was a complex one as to which defendant 15 was not required to abandon its position before trial. The Court 16 of Appeal affirmed, deciding that the trial court's finding of 17 reasonableness was supported by substantial evidence. The Court 18 of Appeal agreed with the trial court in finding that the key 19 issue was a novel one, with the argument advanced by the 20 plaintiff "by no means frivolous." Id. at 986. The court noted 21 that "[a] condemning agency need not "compromise its legal 22 position just to avoid litigation." Id., citing San Diego Metro.
23 Transit Dev. Bd. v. Cushman, 53 Cal. App. 4th 918, 933 (1997).

24 Applying the principles gleaned from MTA and Escondido to 25 the present case, two primary issues emerge.

26 ///

27 ///

28 ///

1 First, the question of whether excess water rights could 2 enhance the overall value the Heise Ranch, despite the strictures 3 of the so-called "unit rule",<sup>4</sup> was hotly contested by the parties 4 through the expert testimony they offered. Whether or not a 5 ready market was available, as well as whether excess water 6 rights could be transferred even if such a market did exist, was 7 disputed.

8 Second, the parties' positions diverged dramatically with 9 respect to what the "highest and best use" of the Heise Ranch was 10 for purposes of valuing the land. Integrated Farms argued that 11 the Ranch should be valued on the assumption that a planned 268 12 unit development community could be constructed on the site, 13 whereas the District claimed that only development with far less 14 density (continued agricultural operations with the potential for 15 more limited residential development) was feasible.

16 The respective positions of both Integrated Farms and the 17 District were reasonable as to both of these issues. The 18 District's position that the "unit rule" still applied, and that 19 the jury should reject any enhanced value to the land based on 20 excess water rights, was not patently unreasonable. On the other 21 hand, given the property's abundant water, it was similarly not 22 unreasonable for Integrated Farms to claim that this factor 23 augmented property value despite application of the "unit rule".
24 ///

25
26 <sup>4</sup>The "unit rule" embodies the notion that just compensation 27 for condemned property cannot be determined by separately 28 valuing, then adding, the separate components of land value. See U.S. v. 6.45 Acres of Land, 409 F.3d 139, 146 (3rd Cir. 2005;
City of Stockton v. Albert Brocchini Farms, Inc., 92 Cal. App.
4th 193, 200 (2001).

1 Further, the same mutually defensible position exists with 2 respect to development density bearing on the "highest and best 3 use" of the Heise Ranch. Depending on how the jury viewed these 4 arguments, the value of the property could easily have shifted 5 dramatically. As in MTA, resolution of these issues hinged on 6 technical testimony from experts for both sides. It was not 7 unreasonable for the District to refrain from abandoning its 8 position in that regard, and in accord with Cushman, the 9 District's position was "by no means frivolous."

10 While Integrated Farms argues that the District assigned no 11 value whatsoever to the property's excess water rights, and 12 further did not budge from its own concept of feasible 13 development in determining highest use, that position is 14 misplaced. First, the District's appraiser, Stephen R. Johnson, 15 did testify to using comparable sales prices in reaching his 16 valuation that included the inferiority or superiority of the 17 associated water rights. The District also presented expert 18 testimony contraverting the feasibility of Integrated's proposed 19 development. Second, the District's deposit of probable 20 compensation totaled $5.2 million based on its Johnson appraisal.
21 Nonetheless, the District final statutory offer more than $1.8 22 million higher than that figure, at $7.0 million.<sup>5</sup> The 23 Declaration of Gary Kvistad explains how the District's final 24 offer took into account a higher per-acre value in the event its 25 density/use projections were not accepted by the jury.

26
27 <sup>5</sup>This distinguishes the present matter from Redev. Agency v.
28 Krause, 162 Cal. App. 3d 860 (1984), a case cited approvingly by Integrated, since in Krause the government refused to offer anything above its appraised value of the property in question.
Id. at 866.

1 The District's offer added $1.2 million to account for that 2 risk,<sup>6</sup> and another $1.1 million was added in recognition of the 3 parties' divergent position vis-a-vis water rights. See Decl. of 4 Gary Kvistad, pp. 11-16.<sup>7</sup>

5 Based on the above, the Court declines to analyze the 6 reasonableness of the District's final offer based entirely on 7 the mathematic discrepancy between it and the jury's verdict.
8 Both MTA and Cushman stand for the proposition that a numeric 9 comparison is only one factor to be considered. Under the 10 circumstances, the District's final offer was reasonable. The 11 District was not required to assume, as Integrated Farms would 12 appear to allege, that the jury would ultimately "split the 13 difference" between the District's $5.2 million appraisal and 14 Arthur Gimmy's appraisal on behalf of Integrated Farms for $19.0 15 million. Instead, the District was entitled to rely on its own 16 legitimate position, and the fact it declined to depart from that 17 position on a wholesale basis does not mean it acted 18 unreasonably.

19 ///

20 ///

21 ///

---

22
23 <sup>6</sup>Integrated Farms' reliance on Ventura County Flood Control 24 Dist. v. Campbell, 71 Cal. App. 4th 211 (1999), is consequently 25 misplaced since in that the case the plaintiff assigned no enhanced value whatsoever to aggregate deposits on the land, whereas here the District did factor excess water rights into its final offer as discussed below.

26 <sup>7</sup>According to Kvistad, the District's $7.0 million final 27 offer was ultimately calculated after considering litigation 28 costs and after applying a ten percent discount to account for the overall risk of litigation. Kvistad Decl., 16:16-26.

1 Because the Court finds that the District's final offer was 2 formulated with care and was not unreasonable,<sup>8</sup> it denies 3 Integrated Farm's Motion to Recover Litigation Expenses.<sup>9</sup> As the 4 prevailing party in this litigation, however, Integrated Farms is 5 entitled to its costs pursuant to Local Rule 54-292(f) and 28 6 U.S.C. § 1920 as follows: court fees in the amount of $589.19; 7 fee for service of process totaling $619.00; court reporter fees 8 of $16,052.35; and necessary fees for exemplification and copying 9 totaling $53,298.76.

17 <sup>8</sup>As indicated above, California Code of Civil Procedure § 18 1250.410(b) requires a showing that plaintiff's offer is 19 unreasonable, and a showing that the defendants final demand was 20 unreasonable in order to justify imposition of litigation expenses against the plaintiff. See also Santa Clara Water Dist.
v. Gross, 200 Cal. App. 3d 1363, 1368 (1988).

21 <sup>9</sup>Given the Court's determination that no entitlement to 22 litigation expenses has been demonstrated, evidence pertaining to 23 prior efforts to settle the case is not relevant, since only the 24 final statutory offer and demand are pertinent in showing 25 entitlement as stated above. See Cal. Code of Civ. Proc. § 26 1250.410(a). The propriety of other offers and demands (and, 27 arguably, settlement negotiations) goes only to the amount of 28 expenses awarded, which the Court need not reach. Consequently, in ruling on this motion, the Court did not consider the Declarations of John Huston, John V. Diepenbrock and G. David Robertson. Therefore it declines to rule on the Objections and Motion to Strike filed by the District in response to those declarations. To the extent that the Declaration of Gary Kvistad explains how the District's final $7.0 million offer was formulated, however, that Declaration was directly relevant to the issues posed by this Motion, and the District's objections to those portions of the Kvistad Declaration are overruled.

1 Costs are therefore taxed in the total sum of $70,559.30.
2 The remainder of Integrated Farms' Bill of Costs is denied.

3 IT IS SO ORDERED.
